CELEBRATES 86TH BIRTHDAY.

Mrs. Clara A. Hayden Enjoys Annual Home Gathering.
Once more as the year has rolled by and as 1915 came in, it brought with it the pleasant memories of the annual birthday parties given Mrs. Clara A. Hayden. These gatherings are one of the pleasantest events in the annals of the Hayden family.
Each year as Mrs. Hayden's birthday approaches her sons, daughters and grandchildren return to her home on Pleasant street to spend the day with her. This year the celebration of Friday and Saturday the guests began to arrive to spend the week-end and to observe Mrs. Hayden's 86th birthday on Monday, the 25th. Those who returned for the home gathering were Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Hayden and daughters, Caroline and Adeline of Haverhill, Mass., Mr. and Mrs. P. Knight, Mrs. H. L. Winchester of Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., Dr. Frank A. Hayden of Portland, Mr. and Mrs. E. Hayden of Portland, daughter Madeline, Mrs. Dr. and Mrs. F. B. Drake with whom she lives. All of Mrs. Hayden's children were present except Mrs. Emma R. Chaffin and Henry Hayden of Bradford, Mass., John J. Hayden of Bradford, Mass., who had been traveling prevented from being present.
The day was most pleasantly spent. At noon a beautiful chicken pie dinner with all the side dishes was served. Dainty place cards with sentiment expressed on the table. With each favor was a sweet pea.
As Mrs. Hayden's custom, she made her own birthday cake which was decorated with the year "1829-1915" and the word "Welcome." There was also a second birthday cake which was the gift of a friend. The remainder of the day was spent in a social way with music and the singing of the old songs.
Many birthday gifts were received and a large number of post cards, booklets and letters of congratulation from many friends in other states, several coming from Arizona and the South. Flowers were also sent including pinks and sweet peas that decorated the house. Each of the absent members received a piece of the birthday cake and a birthday flower.
Mrs. Hayden thoroughly enjoys the home-coming of her children at this time of each year and looks forward to it with great pleasure.
Mrs. Hayden is a remarkably well preserved lady and is as bright and active as a woman many years her junior. She retains all her faculties to a wonderful degree and is a woman it is a pleasure to meet.

George W. Davis Murder.

Remains Located Under Prescott Pratt's Barn at South Paris.
About noon Tuesday, the body of an unidentified person was found under Prescott Pratt's barn in the lower part of South Paris village. The body was wrapped in a blanket and had been dead evidently a number of days.
Shortly before noon Mrs. Cutting who is housekeeper for Prescott Pratt told Sheriff W. O. Frothingham to make an investigation under the barn having evidently become frightened or suspicious. Upon investigation it was found that a body had been placed there in plain sight from the back of the barn. The barn was connected with the house in which Pratt lives. There was no cellar under the barn and the body was laid on its side and appeared to have been dragged under the barn. The edges of the quilt that had been thrown over the body were frozen into the ice.
W. J. Wheeler, the coroner, who was up the line at the time, returned about 3 o'clock and took charge of the body. Two arrests were made by Sheriff Titus, namely, Hiram Cummings and Prescott Pratt on charge of concealing.
Wednesday morning, Prescott Pratt was brought before the Norway Municipal Court arraigned for murder of a white, adult male person, name unknown. Pratt pleaded not guilty and by the request of the State the case was continued to Feb. 4. Pratt was committed to jail without bail.
Hiram Cummings was also brought before the judge and was ordered to appear in court Feb. 4th. Bail was fixed at $500, failing to recognize he was committed.
Albert Bellevue, the State attorney appeared for the State.

It is said that there was a stranger in South Paris in September, 1914, who drove a Packard automobile and attracted attention because of being a good fellow, plentifully supplied with money and liberal in spending it. He was said to have come from Island Pond, Vt., some time in the locality.
A few days later Prescott Pratt came into possession of a second hand Packard automobile valued at $700 or $800. No body questioned his owning it though there was a considerable comment about his buying such a car when he already had three or four second hand automobiles.
Information has come to light that Prescott Pratt applied for a license for a Packard automobile late in the fall of 1914 and the registration at Augusta gave him the usual information about the decrease in the license fee after October.

Lately Prescott Pratt has seemed to be plentifully supplied with money.
When the coroner appeared on the scene he viewed the body and ordered it removed to a local undertaking room. The body was so solidly frozen into the dirt that it was necessary to use axes and chop it out and then it was only after considerable effort that it was removed from its hiding place. A portion of the man's clothes were left solidly frozen in the ice and dirt. The body was badly decomposed, the face black and a hole at the throat, but not of a nature that did not give away the fact that the body was hurried to the undertaker's where a thorough examination was made.
The man wore a pair of leather shoes of good quality and with rubber heels. His clothes were of good quality with a light colored shirt and a white collar. On the dead man's hands were a pair of kid gloves. The theory that the body was concealed last fall was more strongly proven when it was brought to light by the fact that the man's shoes were light and that he did not wear rubber shoes. This feature gave silent proof that the body must have been concealed early in the fall before snow fell.
After the body had thawed sufficiently to investigate the clothing, it was found that the man's shoes were in the pockets, also a driving license. This license was issued early last summer to George W. Davis of Portland.
It is found that Davis worked for the Taxicab Service concern in Portland as a chauffeur until he was killed, and he owned a small automobile. The man was last seen by Portland people the last of September.

Howard W. Worth, foreman of the Taxicab Service, thinks he is nearer 60 than 40 gives the date of the death of the body. Mr. Worth says the man has an 38 or 40 years old living at Island Pond, Vt., and he had another son well over 30 who was killed about a year ago on the Grand Trunk road. There are other children believed to live in Island Pond and there is a Mrs. Davis who is believed to be living somewhere in Massachusetts now.
Mrs. Worth says that Davis was spry, though heavily built, and that he might pass for a great deal under 60 years of age.
Mrs. Addie M. Meehan of Portland, a sister of George W. Davis, said that she had not heard anything from her brother since last fall, probably some time in September, and had been wondering for some time where he had gone or if he had left the city. She could not think of anyone who would have had trouble with her brother as he was of a very pleasant disposition and always made a great many friends in his business.

Mr. Davis had been in Portland for about three years and it is believed that he roomed at the Argyle, a boarding house on Free street up to the time he left the city. His relatives have no idea why he went to South Paris or exactly how long he had been there. He had not lived with his wife for about twelve years.
Besides two daughters at Island Pond, Vt., and a daughter at a boarding house in South Paris, he has two sons living. Guy, who is some where in the West, and Earle Davis, who is on a farm somewhere in Vermont, another son, Ray Davis, was killed about a year ago.
That George W. Davis was murdered for his money is the opinion of his Portland friends and acquaintances, for they claim that when he suddenly disappeared from the city the latter part of September he had his entire season's earnings with him and this amount is estimated as high as a thousand dollars, although there are those who say that this estimate is excessive. They are all of the opinion, however, that the amount was sufficiently to be a motive for robbery.

Davis' departure from Portland has always been shrouded in mystery and his friends there have caused inquiries to be made without results. It is claimed that he left for Poland in company with a stranger and the two were seen near Shaker Village on the last Sunday in September by a Portland chauffeur. Davis and his companion, of whom only a meagre description was given, were apparently making some repairs on Davis' car when seen by the Portland driver and so far as is known, Davis has never been seen since.
Davis had an engagement to take a party out on the day he disappeared and his failure to appear at the time agreed upon caused some comment but little was thought of it at the time. In September Davis called at the lodging house conducted by Mrs. George Mealy, where he had formerly roomed and made arrangements to lodge there. He left the house on a Saturday and never returned. J. O'Neil, who was to have been one of the party Davis agreed to take to Poland, said that the man's disappearance aroused his suspicions and that he has since felt that Davis must have met with foul play. George W. Davis was one of the old time conductors on the Grand Trunk Railroad, known to patrons all up and down the line. He retired about eight years ago.

Davis was held in the highest regard by his friends as being made evident on all sides. Edward L. Foss, the Congress street druggist, was well acquainted with Davis and, in fact, loaned him a sum of money when he purchased a test-bag for use on the business on his own account. Mr. Foss said that he had an especially friendly feeling toward Davis and that he loaned him the money as a matter of friendship and did not charge interest on the loan. Davis was a very excellent reputation and was credited with paying his bills promptly and of being a good man with whom to do business.
It is learned Davis had two married daughters living in Island Pond, Mrs. Pearl Smith and Mrs. James McFarland. His widow, from whom he was apparently separated, lives at Lakeport, N. H.

Mrs. Clara Cutting has left the Pratt house and has returned to her parents' home a short distance away. She was permitted to remove her trunk to her home. She showed evident reluctance to talk, and kept reiterating that she had been told to keep still. She already has told two conflicting stories, the authorities say.
The first of these was that she had first discovered the body beneath the barn and when she asked Prescott Pratt about it, that he threatened to kill her if she told. It is claimed that she quarreled with him Monday morning and immediately told the authorities about the body beneath the barn.
In a later story she claims the body was discovered by Hiram Cummings, who told her about it. She did not deny, on first examination, of having known for some time of the presence of the body, but later said she had been told about it by Cummings on Monday morning.

Just how much Clara Cutting knows about the matter is a point the officers are anxious to find out. She declares she knew nothing and was not suspicious of anything being wrong until Cummings told her about the body that was hidden under the barn and declared she would not have slept in the house a single night had she known it. She says Cummings told her about it Monday afternoon or evening and she did not tell the officers about it until Tuesday forenoon. She gave her reason for not telling before that she feared for her life if she told Monday night and had to remain in the house that night.
Mrs. Cuttings' mother lives in the second house beyond the Pratt house on the same street less than 1000 feet from the scene of the crime. It was to her mother's house that she sought refuge after obtaining her trunk and telling the officers about the hidden body.
When Deputy Titus found the body, it was covered with an old quilt. This was removed and disclosed a heavy plank placed over the body. Beneath the plank the head and shoulders were wrapped in a huge bag. The body was frozen fast in the ground and had to be chopped out with an axe. The face and arms and all exposed flesh were black from decay. In cutting out the body, the clothing was ripped from one leg and revealed the flesh beneath in a better preserved state than the head.
The face had no resemblance to human features.

Coroner's Inquest.
A coroner's inquest was held Wednesday afternoon and Dr. H. L. Bartlett of Norway, medical examiner of Oxford County, was called. He testified that he made the examination of the body and found it to be in a bad state of decomposition and that the examination revealed two bullet holes in the abdomen of the body. One of the bullets had entered about an inch and a half above the right ear and had passed through the brain to the other side of the skull. He testified that these bullets were undoubtedly the cause of Davis' death. He testified that the man had been dead fully three months.
William J. Wheeler conducted the inquest as coroner assisted by the county attorney, Albert Bellevue, of Rumford. The jury consisted of Orin Wright, Leon Russell, Nelson J. Eldred, Byron Tuttle, George F. Eastman, F. N. Wright.
F. N. Wright, foreman of the coroner's jury, reported the following verdict: "George W. Davis of Portland came to his death from two bullet wounds through his head at the hands of a person unknown to the jury."

Lucy Pratt, mother of Prescott, and who owns the barn under which the body of Davis was found, is now living in Auburn, where she is employed in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred P. Taylor, Davis avenue. She left her home in South Paris shortly after Thanksgiving and went to Lewiston taking her youngest son, Albert, with her. For a time she was employed as housekeeper by B. O. Torrey. Later she found a position in Auburn. Her son, Albert Pratt, aged 19, is understood to be employed on a farm in North Auburn.
While Mrs. Pratt declares she knows nothing about the matter except what has been read in the papers, it is understood that she will be subjected to a rigid examination by the officers.
It is the opinion of the officers that Davis was murdered the latter part of September or in early October, and that being the case, the body may have been hidden under the Pratt barn before Mrs. Pratt went away. If such was the case it is thought she may be able to recall certain incidents that will be of great assistance to the officers in their work.
Augustus M. Carter and W. W. Estabrook of Berlin, N. H., have been to West Stoneham and bought one rock maple from which they expect to make one 26-inch paper machine roll. They want five more.

Comforting Words.

Many a Norway Householder Will Find Them So.

To have the pains and aches of a bad back removed—to be entirely free from annoying, dangerous, urinary disorders, is enough to make any kidney sufferer grateful. The following advice of one who has suffered will prove comforting words to hundreds of Norway readers.

"I suffered for five years from backache," says Hiram Lovejoy, Myrtle Ave., South Paris, Me. "For days at a time any sudden move caused added pain. The secretions from my kidneys were too frequent in passage and my rest was broken at night. I lost health and strength and felt discouraged. When one of the family asked me to try Doan's Kidney Pills, I did so. I began to improve at once. It was not long before my kidneys were in good working order."

ALBANY.

Better Price for Apples. Herbert Bean says that he has sold his apples to Eli Stearns of Fryeburg. Mr. Stearns has been out here and got them all packed. This was the last lot of apples to be sold in town.

It is reported that Mr. Bean got $1.50 per barrel right through for No. 1 and No. 2 apples. This price is some different from what a good many sold for early in the fall. For No. 1, they got $1.00 per barrel.

The apple buyers who commenced to buy early last fall for $1.00 per barrel and put them into cold storage, ought to have made their everlasting fortune.

Once in a while a man packed his own apples and shipped them across the water themselves, and got something for the apples and got $1.95 per barrel, net after shipping them across the water. Others might have done the same way and got as to give it all to the apple buyers, but we have all got to live and learn and get our eyes open. Most all the farmers in this locality are afraid to pack their apples and rather give them away to the apple buyers than to be responsible for the packing.

Children's Column.

DEAR EDITOR:—I will send you a story about the picnic at the seashore.

"Let us have a picnic at the seashore," cried Ned. He was speaking to three children who were all trying to think of something to do that they had never done before. "Yes," said Tom, "a seashore picnic will be just the thing. I will take my tent, and if it should be too hot, we can all sit in it and have a fine time." Of course they asked their mother. She said that they might go, but they must take John with them to look after them.

Mamma put up a nice dinner for them, she knew that they would be very hungry after their long walk. Ned and Kate took baskets with them for the pretty shells that they might find there. John had the dinner basket, Tom had his tent, and Ned went in front of the little band with a large flag.

When they reached the seashore, John put up the tent so that the door was next to the seashore. Then he fastened the flag on the top of the tent. The children went off to play on the beach. They found a lot of pretty shells and pebbles, and put them into the baskets. Tom found a starfish. The starfish was a queer looking animal. Its mouth was in the middle of its five arms, and these feelers on each of its five arms, and these helped it to move about.

Later in the afternoon John called out, "You must all be hungry by this time. Don't you want to come to dinner?" Dinner in the tent was so nice, and the children were so hungry, that they did not take them long to eat it. When they had finished dinner, John put the things back into the basket. They all sat around the door of the tent and John told them about the places away over the sea to which the big ships went. Then they played a long time in the sand with the little shovels which John made for them out of shingles. They dug cellars, and made houses and streets. When the sun was getting low, they had a run in the sand. Just then they saw papa coming for them in a carriage. As they rode home, they told their papa about the starfish, and the shells and pebbles. They never forgot the seashore picnic.

WEST FRYEBURG.

Mrs. Wiley Walker. Content, the last of a large family, the children of George and Mary (Kelley) Smith of Conway died Tuesday, Jan. 12, after a long illness at her home in North Conway.

Though a great sufferer at times, she was confined to her bed but a few days, the troubles culminating in heart failure. Her age was seventy-two.

Early in youth she married Wiley Walker and lived many years in West Fryeburg, where four children were born to them and lived to maturity. A daughter, Olive, died several years ago.

Another daughter, Fannie, married and lives in Saco. Two sons, Frank and Wiley, live in North Conway, the latter at the parental home. Her husband, Wiley Walker, is a veteran of the Civil War and is a pensioner, and though severely crippled by rheumatism, manages to get about among relatives and friends in this section occasionally.

Mrs. Walker was in a direct line of descent from a Revolutionary soldier, Thomas Smith, whose grave is in the cemetery at Grove Hill, N. H. Many other descendants are in Conway, Chatham and Fryeburg.

Mrs. Walker's burial was in North Conway, where her home had been for several years past.

Death has been busy among our townsmen during a few weeks past. Among pleasantly remembered residents for many years in West Fryeburg was J. Whitman Towle, who died in Fryeburg recently.

At the Towle home, now owned and occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Meserve, the Sterling Literary Club was organized by Mrs. E. Osgood with a membership of about a dozen of whom only three or four survive. Mr. and Mrs. Towle were interested and active members during the year they lived in the place and will be long remembered by later members who enjoyed their society and that of their interesting family, one of whom still lives in our midst, Mrs. Charles Andrews, and is a valued teacher in our school.

Another townsman we shall miss is Seth Fife, a life long resident of Fryeburg, and interested in all its welfare, and a pleasing man to meet. A sister, Mrs. S. A. Stevens, lives in West Fryeburg. From Fryeburg Center comes the news of the death of Russell Brickett of that section, after a brief illness from pneumonia. One of our highly esteemed citizens and representing one of the oldest families of the locality. He will be greatly missed by many.

Ida Ballard was a recent guest of her sister, Mrs. Emma Walker.

From across the continent by telegraph comes news of the death of Henry Burbank who left this place several years ago, hoping to benefit his health, going to South Decota and from there to California, where he built a home for his mother and lived there till his recent death, of which particulars are awaited with interest. Mrs. Abby (Colby) Burbank, mother of Henry, is well remembered by all who knew her and much sympathy is felt for her in this great loss of only son in his early prime. A sister of Henry, Mrs. Fannie Giles, lives in Jackson, N. H.

Encouraging reports come from Stephen G. Hardy, now a Memorial Hospital, North Conway, N. H.

Walter Hardy, who has been employed by the Power Company at Swan's Falls, is now obliged to take up the work on the Stephen Hardy farm, the hired man having gone to his home.

Fred Tyler takes the place of Walter Hardy in night work at the electric works.

Considerable work in lumbering is retarded by the weather, but those who have had to haul water in the zero weather of the past weeks, will rejoice with cause.

THE WHOLE BODY NEEDS PURE BLOOD

The bones, the muscles, and all the organs of the body depend for their strength and tone and healthy action on pure blood.

If the blood is very impure, the bones become diseased; the muscles become enfeebled, the step loses its elasticity, and there is inability to perform the usual amount of labor. The skin loses its clearness, and pimples, blotches and other eruptions appear.

Hood's Sarsaparilla makes pure blood. It is positively unequalled in the treatment of scrofula and other humors, catarrh, rheumatism, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, that tired feeling. Be sure to get Hood's and get it today. All druggists.

SPEECH CARRIED 3500 MILES

Bell Telephone Engineers Extend Long Distance Line to the Pacific Coast—Science and Inventive Genius Finally Overcome Great Obstacles

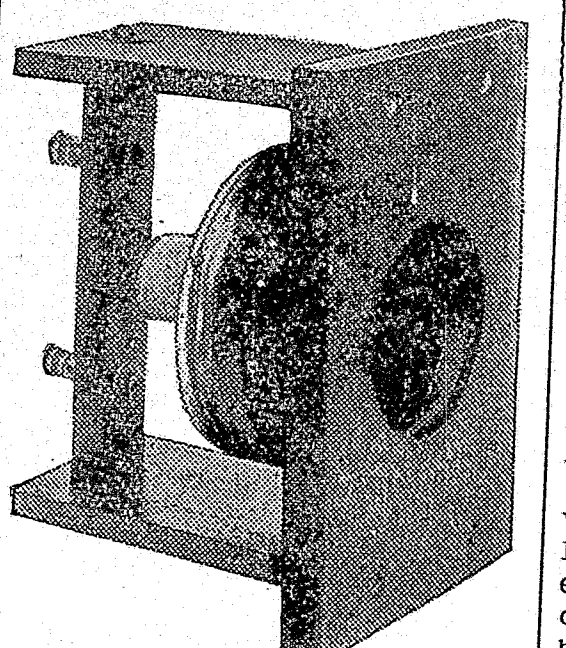

WHAT IT MEANS TO
TELEPHONE FROM BOSTON TO SAN FRANCISCO

Distance—3505 miles.
Twelve States Covered.
Miles of Copper Wire—14,020.
Weight of Wire—Over 3000 tons.
Poles on Line—Over 140,000.
Speed—One-fiftieth of a second.

Crossing the continent—from Boston to San Francisco—in one-fiftieth of a second is an actual accomplishment. Direct conversation between the two cities so far apart was established for the first time, the other day, over the longest telephone line in the world—more than 3500 miles. The successful consummation of this great work is an epoch in history—the acme of telephone attainment. It is an achievement made possible only by the scientific study and persistent effort of the engineers of the great Bell system.

Think for a moment what the opening of the Boston-San Francisco direct line means. It has made Massachusetts and California neighbors. It will carry the business message from the Atlantic to the Pacific quicker than a man can write a letter and it gives him an answer at once. It has annihilated distance. Its commercial value is priceless.

Boston Men Built the Line Across twelve states! Do you realize what that means? Have you ever traveled to the far west? On the fastest trains it takes five days and five nights—120 hours—to go from Boston to San Francisco. And yet it will only be a little while before the business man can sit comfortably in his office and travel instantly by telephone between the two cities over tons of copper wire.

Professor Bell's First Telephone

The opening of this line has a peculiar significance to the people of Boston and New England, for it was in Boston that Professor Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone in 1876, less than forty years ago. A little later the longest toll line in the world stretched from Boston to Lowell and the service was poor and intermittent. How marvelous has been the progress.

And the men who were associated with Bell in those telephone pioneer

Telephoning over such a great distance would have been absolutely impossible without another wonderful invention—the repeating, or loading coils. Without any technical description, it is sufficient to say that these loading coils are placed at various points along the line and give the electrical waves additional force and power.

The line from Boston to San Francisco runs direct to Buffalo, 465 miles; thence to Chicago, 605 miles; to Omaha, 500 miles; to Denver, 555 miles; to Salt Lake City 680 miles; and to San Francisco 770 miles, a total of 3505 miles.

A spur line runs from Chicago to Pittsburg, 545 miles, and thence to New York, 390 miles. Another spur connects Buffalo and New York, 350 miles.

On the same day the line between Boston and San Francisco was opened telephone conversation was established between New York and San Francisco. Professor Bell talked from the New York end and his early associate, Thomas A. Watson, from San Francisco.

An interesting fact in connection with the opening of this line is that Professor Bell used at the New York end an exact reproduction of his first crude instrument. At first it could be used only a few feet. That that instrument could be used in talking between New York and San Francisco is due to the skill and inventions of those engineers who followed Bell after his retirement from the telephone business, in the perfection of the telephone and of switchboards, cables and the hundreds of other accessories to successful telephone transmission.

Looking backward to the Beginning On the evening of Oct. 9, 1876, the first long conversation over the telephone was made by Bell and Watson. They talked for three hours over a telegraph line between Boston and Cambridge. It was the wonder of the day. In May, 1877, a Charles-town man leased two telephones—the first money ever paid for telephone service. The same month the first tiny and crude telephone exchange was born with five telephones connected.

JOHN J. CARTY

As an event, it is on a parity with the opening of the Panama canal. It is another connecting link that physically binds the far east and the far west of America into one complete unit.

Four Thousand Miles Instantly One-fiftieth of a second! Like a flash of lightning goes the spoken word through storm and sunshine over thousands of miles. It starts in Boston at 4 p. m. and, paradoxically, reaches San Francisco three hours earlier. The time schedule has been turned topsy turvy. While you wink, your speech has been carried nearly half way around the world.

Imagine a giant with lungs powerful enough to carry his voice 3500 miles through the air. Picture him standing on the dome of the Massachusetts state house and yelling "Hello" as loud as he could. Four hours later it would be faintly heard at the Panama-Pacific exposition. Blow up a million pounds of dynamite on Boston common and the sound would travel but a few miles. And here have outdistanced nature. Surely nature and energy have won a great victory.

In 1849 "Pike's peak or bust" was the slogan that dominated those hardy pioneers and urged them forward. In 1909, to paraphrase this, the slogan of the telephone engineers was "the Golden Gate or bust." That was the goal upon which they set their eyes and more than five years ago. The long distance lines had already been extended as far west as Omaha. Two years ago Denver became a reality by telephone, and now, in one long jump, the Pacific coast has been reached.

EAST HEBRON.
Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Allen have issued invitations to their wedding reception Friday evening, Feb. 5. The parish gave Rev. and Mrs. E. M. Swift a donation party last week, Thursday afternoon and evening. There were nearly 60 present and a generous supply of provisions, vegetables and cash left.

By August there were 778 telephones in use—all in Boston—and four men had an absolute monopoly of the telephone business. A little later Theodore N. Vail was prevailed upon to resign from the government mail service and become general manager of a little telephone company that was hardly organized and had no money. Month after month the little Bell company lived from hand to mouth. No salaries were paid in full. Often, for weeks, they were not paid at all. In 1880 John J. Carty, chief engineer of the company, the master mind in scientific telephony, was a Cambridge boy who worked as an operator in the early days for $5 a week.

Thomas D. Lockwood, general patent attorney of the company, a telephone expert for nearly forty years, lives in Melrose.
Thomas A. Watson, the youthful mechanic who assisted Bell in his early experiments and who was the first person in the world to hear the human voice over a wire, lives in Braintree and in Boston.

Some Facts and Figures
At the present time there are two complete physical circuits, each 3505 miles long, between the two cities. Then, by means of a wonderful development of electrical study, in the transposition of these two circuits according to a certain scientific formula, a third circuit called a "phantom" circuit is created, making it possible for six people to talk at one time—three at each end—over these two pair of wires.

There are 14,020 miles of hard drawn copper wire in both of these circuits. Each circuit mile of wire weighs 870 pounds, so that the entire weight of both circuits—four wires—is over 3000 tons. This tremendous weight is supported by 140,000 poles.

Recollections of Early Settlers of Greenwood

By PROF. A. E. VERRILL of Yale University Block Houses; Indian Raid from Canada to Bethel.

In a former article (No. 12, Nov. 13)
I referred to an Indian raid on Bethel from Canada, in 1781, as a probable reason for the building of a block-house on Patch Mountain, unless it had been built previously in anticipation of such raids, for similar block-houses were then common in the sparsely settled parts of the State, and additional ones were then built in Bethel.

The following brief account of the raid on Bethel may be of interest in this connection. Bethel was settled earlier than Greenwood, because it was on the Androscoggin river and in those early times travel was largely by water, and therefore settlers located first along the river valleys. Bethel was at first called Subury Canada, because it was somewhere near Canada, or on the trail to Canada.

In 1781, Bethel had ten families of settlers, but there was then no real road through to Norway, merely a trail.
It was only in 1812-13, that the inhabitants of Bethel voted to build a road through to Greenwood "over Paradise Hill and all the other bad hills, as one old writer stated it. In 1814, the first postoffice was established, and the mail then went via Waterford, Paris, and Rumford.

On the 3rd of August, 1781, a party of five Canadian Indians, led by Tomhegan, "an ugly chief," came down the Bear river to Bethel. They plundered
the house of Capt. Benjamin Barker, who lived in what is now Gilead, and also robbed Miss Mary Russell and Miss Betsey Mason. In Bethel they captured Lieut. Jonathan Barker, and Capt. E. Twitchell, whom they found at the house of Lieut. Nathaniel Segar, all of whom they bound and imprisoned in Lieut.
Clark's house. They then robbed the house of all that they wanted. Capt.
Twitchell managed to escape and ran away hiding in the woods, and Lieut.
Clark escaped later and returned to the settlement.

Benjamin Clark and Nathaniel Segar were held captive and were taken to Canada, suffering many cruelties and much hardship, as narrated by Mr. Se-gar. They were kept in Canada sixteen months, as prisoners. At about that time the English army officers in Canada had been paying the Indians
for the scalps of New England settlers, and somewhat higher prices for living captives, especially for women, who usually were kept as house servants.

Why the women and children were not killed and scalped in this raid we are not told, but perhaps they took refuge in the block-house that existed there at that time. The smallness of the party of Indians precluded the taking and holding more prisoners. Possibly the approach end of the war had materially diminished the market for white scalps in Quebec. Most likely the settlers feared that this small party was only the scouting party of a larger number.

The next night after the raid, John Grover, the father of Dr. John Grover, started on foot through the forest, following a mere trail over the mountains of Greenwood, Albany, Waterford, etc., to Fryeburg, where he secured help. On his arrival at Fryeburg, in the morning, messengers were sent to the various settlements along the Saco river. A company of men were quickly raised and they started at once, and marching all night reached Bethel the next morning. This company was led by Lieut.
Stephen Farrington. The friendly Indian, Sabattus, acted as guide.

Pursuing the raiders, they found in Gilead the body of James Pettiglow, whom the Indians had killed and scalped.
Further pursuit was deemed useless and they returned to Bethel.

The inhabitants at that time took shelter in the block-house with the soldiers that had been sent there as a guard, and alarm signals were immediately arranged. Two more block houses were then built at Bethel. One was at the farm of Amos Young. In 1782, twenty-seven soldiers were stationed there in the block-house. This however was the last hostile Indian raid from Canada into New England. Many had occurred previously, some of them bloody.

Considering the alarm caused by this and many other more disastrous raids in previous years, it is no wonder that a block house was built near one of the old trails over Patch Mountain from Bethel, which is situated less than ten miles farther north.

Origin of Greenwood Families;
Puritan Customs

The earlier settlement of Bethel, explains the fact that a considerable proportion of the early settlers in Greenwood moved southward from Bethel, as soon as roads were constructed. Some settled at Locke's Mills, where mills were soon built, but others settled in the vicinity of Greenwood. Among the latter was Rev'd. Edw. Whittle, as previously mentioned.

A considerable part of the early settlers in Greenwood went there from Bethel, not and Poland, and their families had,
in many cases, migrated from Salem
and Gloucester, Mass., in some cases abiding at first in New Gloucester. The family names of the early settlers of Minot and Poland are largely the same as those of early Puritan stock, and many were of early Puritan stock, and many retained, for a long time, Puritanic ideas and customs. Many of the older settlers, whom I knew when a boy, retained the cost of cutting it. Thus it often happened that the best parts of many forests were merely felled and
when, partly dry burned on the places
where they grew, the ashes fertilizing
the soil. I have seen this done in the wilderness parts of Greenwood, on a large scale, just before planting corn and potatoes.

the family, and sometimes remain in the church during services.

I remember one minister who fell into great disfavor, especially among the married women, because, after being annoyed by the crying of some of the babies, during his long prayers, he remarked that he wished the women
"would keep their dogs and babies at home." But in most cases they had no domestic help and no one to care for the babies, except their own mothers. Camp-meetings were the great events, social and otherwise, long prepared for.

Big Timber; Great Trees for Masts;
When first settled the mountains, hills and valleys of Greenwood were covered with a dense unbroken forest, previously undisturbed by man. The trees, like the soil, were of various kinds. The most valuable to the settlers were the white pines and the sugar maples.

The white pine grew to great size wherever the soil was suitable, especially on the lower hills. About 1848, I saw in the yard in front of the oil saw mill at Greenwood City, several large trees
so large that two men, standing one on each side, could not see each other, and they were not short men either. These were sections of one large pine, felled not far away, and saved into sections short enough to be loaded on bob-sleds and hauled to the mill in winter by oxen.

About that time, probably in the winter of 1850, a huge pine timber, cut and hewed for the mast of a ship, was hauled through the village, on its way to Portland.

It was said to be over 80 feet long.
Its diameter at the butt was about three and a half to four feet, and perhaps 15 inches at the smaller end. It appeared to be absolutely straight, and was supported on a number of stout sleds, except near the tip, which might drag on the snow, at times. Eighty oxen were required to haul it. The entire oxen team was hauled over the hill, and remained in the village over night, and many people came there to see it. It must have been a magnificent tree when growing. Old settlers said that in early times such trees were not uncommon in Greenwood.

But even in my boyhood, all those that were accessible had been cut down, and when straight enough they had many cases, been hauled to Portland for masts.

In a former article I mentioned the great numbers of huge pine stumps that covered much of the pasture lands in Greenwood, and especially the hills that he called the village. Many of them were four to five feet in diameter, and often five feet or more high, because the trees were cut in a winter when the snow was very deep, and my grandfather Hilborn, who had them cut, explained to me. They were cut about 1850 to 1855, I think.

In the years of the early settlers, the manufacture of maple sugar, in spring,
was as important and often principal industry, for cane sugar was then far higher in price than in more modern times. Nearly every farmer saved most of the rock maples, in clearing the land, and made more or less sugar and syrup, both for home use and for sale.

When possible they bought huge "potash" kettles, made of cast iron, in which to evaporate the sap, but many could not pay the cost of such kettles and used smaller ones, made nearer home. It is on record that the grandfather of a man my wife, when a boy, had, in winter, on a hand-sled, one of these big potash kettles all the way from Portland to Bethel, probably about seventy miles by the best roads then in use, perhaps much more. That was about 1780, but I have not the records
at hand, for the correct date, it illustrates, however, the value of the maple sugar production at that period. Many of the ancient rock maples are still standing, and groves of younger ones have often been allowed to grow up, but owing to the modern cheapness of cane sugar, comparatively little maple sugar is now made. Making sugar came at a time of the year, in early spring, when there was comparatively little other farm work to be done, so that it kept otherwise idle hands busy and contributed to prosperity.

Vast quantities of hard wood trees of all kinds were cut for firewood in the early days, because there were then very few other uses for such timber.
Wood was so cheap that it could not be sold in the larger towns, southward, for prices high enough to much more than pay for the actual cost of hauling it seven or eight miles or more, over the rough roads, leaving almost nothing to replace the cost of cutting it. Thus it often happened that the best parts of
many forests were merely felled and
when, partly dry burned on the places
where they grew, the ashes fertilizing
the soil. I have seen this done in the wilderness parts of Greenwood, on a large scale, just before planting corn and potatoes.

The Cost of Distribution.

The past summer was a year of agricultural fertility. Food products ought to be cheap this winter. In a great many rural districts fruits and vegetables have been rotting under the trees and in the garden. Yet while apples, for instance, were rotting in the country, you might have to pay $3 or $5 a barrel to buy them in the cities. Similarly with other products.

An investigation was recently made in a city of 100,000 people, of the cost of delivering milk. It was found that something like 100 milk carts were traveling through the place daily, and covering in the aggregate a distance of 2400 miles. Yet there was about 250 miles of streets in that city. Hence 10 milk carts on the average went through each street. The time of nine of those milk teams was largely wasted. The consumer paid the needless cost. Similarly the teams and motor cars that collected the milk from the out-lying country were running over the same ground.

An even more remarkable case is reported from a town of 6000 people to provide which with milk different carts traverse the same streets day by day.

In the city first referred to the milk consumers were paying eight to nine cents per quart. Yet the farmers got but four cents. Some of them at a distance got but two and a half to three cents. Although the consumer is already paying a high price for milk, yet in many places, because of low returns, and milk farmers seem likely. It may yet prove necessary to jack up the consumer another cent or two.

Acidity in Soil.

One of the most important problems for farmers to determine whether or not the soil of their particular farm needs lime. The reason that soil needs lime, says an exchange, is that the soil is sour and most crops do not thrive in a sour soil. All sections where farmers are experiencing greater difficulty each year in securing a satisfactory stand of clover will probably be greatly benefited by the liberal use of lime. The clover may come up and apparently start well, but when the grain crop is removed clover is cut the following season large patches in the clover field may contain stony weeds and often mostly sorrel. Sorrel seems to thrive on land that needs lime to enable it to produce even fair crops.

Farmer can determine whether the soil in any particular field needs lime or not by two methods. (1) Scrape a piece of blue litmus paper against the moist earth with the back of the shovel, or a knife blade, or a piece of glass. If the paper will turn red in from 10 to 20 minutes. Care must be taken not to allow the blue litmus paper to come in contact with anything sour before being placed in the soil. Even the acid from the fingers touch the corners of the paper. This change will be noticed where the litmus paper can be secured at almost any drug store. (2) The other test is to use lime on a strip of land or on several strips of land across a field or on several corners. If the clover grows better on the limed strips, it will pay to lime the entire field. This latter is especially reliable if manure and fertilizer have been used on the field.

MILTON PLANTATION.

Village Improvement Society. The Village Improvement Society of Milton Plantation was organized on Dec. 3, 1913, with nineteen members and elected officers for their first year. Mrs. A. H. Mann, Mr. and Mrs. Mann kindred have the use of their house for the purpose of holding meetings, socials, etc., and all members agreed to work for the purpose of building a hall.

During the first year the members presented the drama, "Diamonds and Hearts," four times, also giving numerous dances, and a fair in December, 1914, which proved a great success. At the end of the first year there were thirty-eight members and over $135 in the treasury, besides owning three dozen chairs, and a portable stage and scenery in the spring twenty-six by fifty feet, and in large enough to present a drama quite comfortably.

The society have plans to build a hall in the spring twenty-six by fifty feet. It is hoped that the organization will prosper in the coming year, even better than it has in the year just passed. Mrs. Hildebrand's Legacy," to be presented the first week in February.

WOMAN'S PLACE.

The young man was spluttering about suffrage for women. "Women are all belong. They are good cooks, good housekeepers, but very weak compared with men when it comes to judgment on the affairs of the nation."

He ran along in this strain for some little time until an old gentleman who had been sitting in the corner smoking his pipe asked if he might have the floor for a minute.

The young man nodded and settled in his seat as if he expected to be bored by some utterly out-of-date remarks on human progress.

"My son," said the old gentleman, "you will admit that if it had not been for the loving care of some woman in the first few years of your life you would not be riding on this train today. She started you right and for a good many years you looked upon her as the best guide to good conduct."

"It is because of this early training that we are rather a decent set, we men, looks as if we had made a mess of things. For over two thousand years we have been teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ and at this moment several million men are at each other's throats in Europe. I have gone back over a hundred years to have something to say about how the affairs of the world shall be conducted? Then we are doing today. Just think that over, my boy, and the next time you run across an advocate of suffrage, I wonder let her that you think she is the movement and you will be glad to help her."

"For it is certain that if women were allowed an equal share with men in the government of the world there would be no more wars. If the female is dead have us believe it is true that she knows the cost of human life."

"Without mothers there would be no soldiers and no mother would vote to send her son to war. The tax she has already paid in bringing that son into the world and rearing him to the fighting age is far greater than any which can be imposed upon man."

"Number 247695 lies stark and cold the company records in the words, 'Killed in Action.' Nothing more!"

A few of his comrades who with him on his last day speak of his courage, helpful smile. He was a good soldier and a brave man.

"But back home his mother, as she hears and thinks of the babe at her breast and what of pain and travail he had cost, or recalls the sturdy little tow-head trudging off to school, turning through the gate. Remembers her face when she first saw him in uniform and how she had calmed herself by peace and military service meant only drilling and training which would be good for the young man."

"And then came the awful parting—the long weeks of suspense until that fearful day when the word came that their boy was one of the thousands who were killed. Her boy was dead at twenty-four."

No man can understand what that means to her—the price she has paid. Her baby, her boy, her all. Tell her that any war is holy? She would insure what armies and navies have failed to accomplish—the lasting peace of the world."

See that Horses are Blanketed.

Winter is with us. The majority of human beings have warm clothes and their warm homes to protect them from cold and rain and snow. Think of the helpless, speechless animals! Whether you are a member of a humane society or not, use every effort to encourage the proper blanketing and housing of the animals in cold weather. You can accomplish good results by word of caution directed to the merchant who desires your trade, and also to the driver of the horse who delivers packages to your door, but if 38 states have found it a wise law protection of animals.

MAINE REPRESENTED.

Forty-four acts of heroism in different parts of the United States were recognized at the seventh annual meeting of the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission at Pittsburgh, Pa., Jan. 20th, when 11 silver medals and 33 bronze medals were awarded. Among these were awarded: Floyd E. Morgan of Bryant Pond, Me., who was 29 years old and saved Charles A. Jacobs, aged 56, from drowning in Bryant Pond, after a canoe had upset on Nov. 13, 1911.

The following is an account of the accident:—A short piece of board and heroic efforts on the part of Floyd E. Morgan, who heard his cries for help, probably saved the life of Charles Jacobs, today, when he was overturned in the wind was blowing a gale and the waves were running high when Jacobs started out in pursuit of his boat, which had broken away from its moorings and was blown across the pond. He was a third of a mile from shore when his canoe was capsized and he was thrown into the water. Morgan heard his cries and obtained a boat, but could find no oars. Using a short board he paddled out to where Jacobs had been struggling in cold water for 20 minutes and rescued him.

Cause of Poor Butter.

One of the most common causes of poor-quality butter is the lack of immediate thorough cooling of the cream after separation. The dairy division of the United States has made a careful investigation of conditions on a large number of dairy farms, and the data obtained show that, if properly cooled, cream of the best grade can be produced with but little extra labor or expense. The principles involved are very simple and are easily understood.

A liberal use of ice which has been stored in winter to be used the following summer is one of the requirements for the solution of the poor butter problem. Farmers who are already successful in delivering good products to the creamery have usually provided for themselves a convenient source of supply for ice-water tanks for storing the ice and ice-water tanks for the immediate cooling of the milk or cream. In parts of New England, although the dairymen often hold cream on the farm four days in the summer and seven days in the winter, they deliver their product practically creamery it after it reaches the distance of from 50 to 300 miles and may still be sold in these remote localities as the form of sweet cream.

The expense connected with the liberal use of ice in this connection is so small and the result so satisfactory that details have been compiled for the consideration of those interested in dairymen. The bulletin should be of use in dairy sections where natural ice is obtainable. Plans and specifications for ice houses are given.

In its general summary the bulletin makes the following 10 suggestions: (1) The ice should be abundant; the cost of harvesting and storing is usually very small.

(2) If a stream of water is available, a small ice pond can generally be constructed on the farm by building a dam.

(3) In building an ice house, care should be taken to provide for proper ventilation and drainage. The drain pipe should be efficiently trapped to prevent air from entering the house through the drain.

(4) The efficient insulating of ice houses is of utmost importance, and special great care should be exercised in the selection and installation of the insulating material.

(5) About 40 cubic feet of space ice should ordinarily be allowed for each cow. A cubic foot of ice weighs about 57 pounds.

(6) Under general conditions about one pound of ice will be required to cool and keep one pound of cream in good condition until delivered to the creamery when its deliveries are made three times a week.

(7) When storing ice about 50 per cent. more should be packed than is actually needed. This margin allows for a heavy shrinkage and for household uses.

(8) The dairy farmer should provide annually a tank of ice to one ton of ice per cow for cooling cream only and one and one-half to two tons per cow for whole milk is cooled, depending upon the locality and other factors.

If a cake of ice is kept floating in the water surrounding the cream cans, the temperature will remain at about 40 F.

Good ice-water tanks can usually be constructed for from $5 to $20.

State Registration for Nurses.

Now that State registration is the subject of prime importance to the Maine nurse, it seems fitting to state some of the advantages to be derived from the general public, and to the nurses themselves, of the proposed bill. While registration hinders no one, how it does enable, from practicing nursing, take up branches of the art which are lines in the many fields now rapidly opening up to the trained nurse. If endured the necessary deprivations and who has conformed to the requirements stated in the proposed bill, should have some method of distinction from one who is not come up to the allotted standard. Registration places the training on an educational basis, by maintaining a standard curriculum, which has now become necessary in order to be recognized by the Bureau of Education at Washington. This recognition is necessary, for most of the desirable positions now open to the nurse who is a registered nurse, men that has produced more great states produces just as good as any other. It states in our beautiful country and other would be a pity for them to be turned out there as high an educational basis as other states. There are states where such a law is compulsory. There the nurse could not practice. There the without breaking a state law, profession would not take the examination, unless her own state had equally high standards. True there are others more lenient, but if 38 states have found it a wise law it is not good for Maine?

WHEN THEY WENT BACK TO THE OLD HOME FARM

"Yes, I'm going back to live in the country," said a woman who has won a name in the city for her dynamic energy in philanthropic work. "You know I was born and raised in the country, and lived on a farm all my life until a few years ago, when I persuaded my husband to move into the city. I knew I was capable of executing work and I positively loved being worked to death when it comes to bettering the conditions for those poor little tots that are born into the world without any chance at all."

"I never liked the country particularly. It seemed so dull, and the people so narrow. And I said, when we came back that I had found my place in the world and meant to stay where I could do the most good."

"But I didn't reckon on that big sign of mine."

"He's making a name for himself in his profession, but at the same time he's working himself to death. Last spring he was laid up with brain fever. We thought he would have brain fever. Really, I don't know when the boy got any sleep; he was always studying when he was not attending to the calls of his profession."

"After he got well last spring he bought an automobile and took long rides out into the country whenever he got a chance. I've known him to study until midnight, with a wet towel bound about his head, and then to take out the machine for a ride to rest his brain so that he could sleep for three or four hours."

"One Saturday night—it was a rainy night and the roads must have been a howl of mud—he didn't come back at all. How we worried! But he arrived all right Sunday evening, and I shall never forget the look of content on his face."

"Mother," he said, "I went out to the old home farm. The house was empty and I could not get in, but I climbed into the barn and up into the hay, where I could lie and hear the rain on the roof. And, mother, I slept. It was like heaven. Mother, why don't you and dad go back to the old farm and give your children a home to go to when we're tired?"

"I wouldn't consider it then," she continued, "because I still felt that I was needed here, and I hated the country. But after that my son went out to the farm every Saturday night and stayed in the barn. It was marvelous how it refreshed him. And presently soon I noticed my husband was sneaking off with him. It seemed to rejuvenate him, too."

"Then my boy began to show me that I was needed out in the country, too—that somebody ought to teach progress and beauty and sanitation to people who were utterly neglected on the farms and in the villages."

"Why, mother," he said, "do you know that there's hardly a flower bed or a kitchen garden in that whole district? We have a movement for home farm places as bare as a desert. And look at the little farm babies, mother. Here in the city are district pensioners and physicians and babies' dish-thing but an overworked mother who doesn't know the first thing about hygiene, and a country doctor who does all he can, but can't get around as often as he'd like to."

"That's set me to thinking. Besides I began to find out that I was selfish in not considering the comfort of my own family. My husband and my son were hanging for the old farm, and here I kept them cooped up in the city. They needed the outdoors and the exercise of the country, and the freedom from the city's tension, but I had insisted upon their living where it pleased me to live, and I never let them down."

"And so," she concluded, with a sweeter smile than I had ever seen on her face, "I'm going back to keep the old home because, after all, it's a woman's place to make her own folk happy. I guess maybe those tired farmer women and their children need me just as much as the Settlement House does in the city."

Educated Men Take Up the Farm.

One reason for believing that we have ahead of us a better agricultural era is the greater number of educated men who are being attracted to farming. Not that these men may influence farming methods one way or another, although I believe that they will, but I refer only to the weight that their judgment should have, says the National Stockman.

When we see thousands of men taking special training to become farm owners when a generation ago those young men would have thought that the so-called training meant a fitting for one of when thousands of business men in towns and cities are acquiring land, it is a reasonable expectation that the outlook in long run is good. Of course there is much that cannot be formed with some land owners who never will make the most of their chance, but there are far more progressive people with a true faith in the future of farming than ever before in this country.

There are many things which every fruit and vegetable and nearly every thing else, are too low in price, but it is my privilege to meet thousands of men within a year who are full of making money from the land. Many of them are specialists in considerable of the good corn soil who looks chiefly to corn and hogs for profit. They know what are the crop adaptations of their land and are in the business with all of the energy and faith that any manufacturer could have in his business.

CAN DO WITHOUT POTASH.

Potash is one of the three chief constituents of commercial fertilizers. This country's supply comes almost entirely from Germany. Its present price, now almost three times normal, makes its use prohibitive except in special cases. In this connection it is of particular interest to note that the New Hampshire farmer is in a very advantageous position. A recent bulletin of the department of chemistry of the New Hampshire agricultural experiment station gives some interesting and valuable information on this subject.

The soils of this state are very largely of granitic origin and contain on the average about 2 per cent. potash. It is this natural supply of potash which the New Hampshire farmer must draw upon at the present time. In a soil which carries 2 per cent. potash, the amount per acre foot totals 60,000 pounds. Sixty pounds of potash per acre is more than the average application in a commercial fertilizer. Under these conditions only one pound is added for 1000 pounds of natural potash is not so readily available as the muriate or sulphate of potash in fertilizers. However, this enormous amount need not become available only very slowly to meet the needs of a given crop. Much interesting data is given in this bulletin showing that phosphate and nitrate of soda applied as fertilizers increase the rate at which the natural supply of potash becomes soluble.

Tables are given also containing data on the effect of the different fertilizers used alone and in combinations on the yield of hay. This data shows that when nitrate of soda and acid phosphate are applied alone the yield is practically the same as when they are applied with potash additional. In other words, for the hay crop potash, even at normal prices, does not produce a profitable increased yield.

Present conditions, therefore, offer the New Hampshire farmer a splendid opportunity to use this natural resource High Price of Wheat.

With wheat reaching $1.35 and flour soaring to $8.00 a barrel the man who raised his own wheat last year is on easy street as far as flour goes, and the man last year who decided to plant every available piece of land with potatoes and buy flour with the proceeds made a mistake.

Why is it when it takes an acre of ground to raise wheat enough to keep the ordinary family on a farm, the farmer instead of putting it into potatoes? It costs nothing to raise it after the seed is sown, and the threshing costs very little, resulting in as good a quality of flour as can be raised in this country.

During the past few years flour has been exceptionally high, and those farmers who raise their own wheat have been saving money by having it to rely on.

Why is it that more farmers do not raise wheat and thus have less article to buy with hard earned cash?

SOME REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD PATRONIZE HOME INDUSTRY AND BUY YOUR BREAD FROM THE HOME BAKER

He can furnish you as good quality goods, as any outside Baker, barring none. He can furnish you absolutely fresh goods. He can make earlier deliveries. You can phone him any hour of day for rush orders.

This is a home industry. His is a limited industry as to possible customers. The patronage you give him is returned to the same home territory. He is a Household Necessity. Many times during the season you exclaim: "What should we do without the Home Baker!"

MORAL: The City Baker with thousand upon thousand of people to draw from does not need your support. Home business does.

TO MAKE MARRIAGE A SUCCESS.
When the average young girl plights her troth to the young man of her fancy it is seldom that she looks ahead to the time when the romance has worn away, and married life has become a reality instead of a delightful dream. She believes, happily, that love will remain a fever point forever and aye, and forgets that before many months she will be seeing her husband as he really is and not as she imagined him to be. Then is the danger time of marriage, the period of readjustment, and unless patience and a good deal of common sense are brought to bear upon the situation the love craft is apt to run aground on the rocks of incompatibility.

What is the best course to pursue during this dangerous voyage? No one can tell you so well as the woman who has already sailed successfully through this precarious passage. Such a woman, happily in her home life, was discussing with a young bride, recently, the danger points that disclose themselves during the first year of marriage.

She smiled reminiscently as she said: "Certainly I never dreamed that my husband and I would almost founder on a rock that showed up by degrees during the first 12 months of our married life."

And yet, on looking around, I see that same dangerous rock threatens other young married people. Sometimes it is a great tragedy that may separate a husband and wife.

"But in our case it was no tragedy of finding ourselves so dissimilar in tastes and temperament that we could not live together in harmony. No, it was apparently a very small point that came near wrecking our happiness."

"John and I were both under 25 when we married, and both madly in love. 'I suppose we took it for granted that we should always be so blissfully happy in one another's society that nothing else counted. And it was not for some time after the honeymoon that I think that we both began to feel conscious that there were drawbacks in both of us that were making for mutual unhappiness."

"Never before our marriage could I have imagined that John possessed little ways that jarred on me to such an extent that at times I felt driven to madness. And if he had told me the same thing I could not have believed it."

"Yet it was the irritation of these unconscious tricks and habits that almost undermined our love."

"For instance, I know now that I had a way of fidgeting with my hands that nearly drove John crazy. One day he said irritably to me, 'I wish you wouldn't always be playing with your chain or your bracelet, or continually fidgeting with your hair. You can't think how it gets on my nerves.'"

"As I was perfectly unconscious of this failing I made vehement denial that I ever fidgeted, though, at the same time, I made up my mind to watch myself and see if the accusation were true. I was very angry too, and replied crossly: 'You can't imagine how your habit of continually drumming with your fingers on the table or chair gets on my nerves. Sometimes I feel as if I could scream aloud.'"

"Naturally such remarks as these did not tend to preserve the peace. It seemed too, as though we were both on the alert to watch the other for these bad habits and then to cry out: 'There, look how you are fidgeting,' or 'Now you are drumming again.'"

"Then John had a habit of invariably leaving open the door of a room in which I was sitting and very seldom remembering to close it. As this necessitated my getting up from my own chair every time to shut the door I began to feel as irritated as if he had banged it loudly."

"I seemed always to be reminding him of this habit, and, though he apologized at first for the omission, nine times out of ten he continued the practice until I began to feel on the edge of nervous prostration. Silly, wasn't it? But it's true that small annoyances like this tell."

"On the other hand, he declared I had the habit of leaving open every drawer into which I looked, and as John loved tidiness, this trick of mine seemed to irritate him particularly. I never dreamed that his habit of eating with extraordinary rapidity would annoy me so intensely, and I have no doubt I vexed him with my constant criticism of this fault."

"Now, these habits may all seem very trivial, but when husband and wife once begin to notice and criticize adversely all of another's personal idiosyncrasies, then a state of discord may easily set in. In fact, we were both growing into a state of nervous irritability with one another which might have led to disastrous consequences."

"Luckily, however, a wise friend noticed the tension and gave me advice which I promptly acted upon, and for which I have ever been grateful."

"Perhaps she gave John the same counsel, for I noticed that he too suddenly left off commenting upon my little ways."

"Never find fault or criticize your husband, directly," said my friend. "If you dislike his ways criticize the same thing in another person, and your husband will be likely to take the hint. Use tact, the most beneficial factor in married life."

"As John and I really loved one another, we naturally tried to break ourselves of every trick the other found distressing. But we gave up irritable criticism and tried tact. As a matter of fact, I begged John to write down any of my habits that irritated him, and as far as possible, I rectified them."

"But we nearly came to grief over these trifles, and I believe that there are many others who need to use tact or they, too, may find that married happiness can be destroyed through husband and wife daily jarring upon each other's nerves, as we used to do."—(Express.)

EAST OXFORD.
Story About the Pig.
His name is Jethro and he comes whenever he hears his name. He first saw the light up in Norway the village, I believe, and the owner of the mother hog, not understanding the care of swine for some reason, let her die, so this pig with two or three others, was taken down to Oxford by a kind lady who knew how to feed pigs and how to raise them. However, this is the only one that "lived to tell the story," and not a remarkable one either, until it fell into the hands of the bountiful feeder, C. H. Flood.
Since then the pig has gained some times more than a pound a day. Having free range, he eats with the cat, the dog and the hens, and from his own trough. He has great times fighting with the dog. He follows Mr. Flood everywhere about the farm like a dog and has been with him to a neighbor's, a quarter of a mile away. While there he entered the living rooms, munching apples from a basin and seemed very much at home.
He has been allowed to enter the parlor even when the minister and his wife were calling, and they enjoyed seeing him very much. He weighs about eighty pounds now and is weighed in this manner: Neighbor Greely steps onto the scales with the pig in his arms and Mr. Flood laughs and relates how he weighs two pigs at the same time. The pig is dropped, Greely is weighed again, and then they know how much the pig has gained. He will probably not be heard from again until he is sold for a large porker—at present the pig is not for sale.

The Caduceus
The January number of the Norway High School paper has been issued and copies may be obtained of the business manager, Linwood Fogg. The editorial board for this year is:

Editor-in-Chief—Howard L. Chick, '15.
Assistant—Albert R. Bartlett, '16.
Literary—Ruth Noble, '15; Winnifred McKen, '16.
Pointers—Irene Locke, '15; Marion Bradbury, '16.
Athletic—Jacob Klain, '15; Francis Andrews, '16.
Exchanges—James Welch, '15; Edgar Dunn, '16.
Album—Mildred Noyes, '17; Katherine Jones, '17.
Business Manager—Linwood E. Fogg, '15.
Assistant—Shirley McKay, '16.

There is much literary ability shown in this number, and the stories and poetry are entertaining and unusually well written. The pointers are true to name. They are surely witty. It tells of the interest the school takes in athletics. The basketball team is doing excellent work and under the head of Coach J. H. Carter of Bethel will be one of the superintendents in the championship team of last year.

The alumni department occupies five pages and tells where the graduates of the school are and in brief what they are doing. The school happenings, exchanges, advertising and the teachers' pictures make up this number that radiates the school spirit of Norway High. The covers are in the class colors, "Garret and white."

One of the new courses of study recently introduced is the commercial course, and we read in this paper that nearly all of the pupils are enrolled in the business course.

Mrs. Flora Louise Verrill.
Mrs. Flora Louise Verrill, wife of Prof. Addison E. Verrill of New Haven, Conn., an emeritus of Yale University, died at Columbia Hotel in Portland, Monday morning at the age of 74, after a protracted illness of six months' duration. Mrs. Verrill was spending the summer at her girlhood home in Norway, when she was taken ill and went to Portland for treatment, but was unable to proceed farther on her journey. Burial was at New Haven on Wednesday.

Mrs. Verrill was born in Norway in 1840, daughter of Elliott and Lavinia H. (Barton) Smith. She was married June 15, 1865, to Prof. Verrill, and most of her life had been spent in Norway and New Haven.

Besides her husband, five children and two brothers survive her. Her children are George E. Verrill of New Haven, A. H. Verrill of New York, Edith B. Verrill of New Haven, Clarence S. given by nature. It is a man's duty to

The Secret of Success

Genuine Merit Required to Win the People's Confidence.

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine.
A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says: "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify.
No other kidney remedy that I know of
has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr.
Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder diseases, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcels Post. Address
Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.,
